Delhi High Court Upholds Its Original Side Rules, Prescribing A Maximum Period Of 120 Days For Filing Of Written Statements In All Suits Filed Before It

The Hon'ble Delhi High Court (“Delhi HC”) was recently presented with a challenge^[i] to the constitutionality of Rule 4, Chapter VII of the Delhi High Court (Original Side) Rules, 2018 (“Original Side Rules”)^[ii], which mandates a strict timeline of 120 days for filing of written statements even in non-commercial matters.

The challenge under the petitions was that the mandatory timeline of 120 days for filing of written statements for suits filed originally before the Delhi HC discriminates between those litigants that are parties in non-commercial suits before other civil courts in the territory of Delhi, which follow the provisions of Order VIII Rule 1 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908. Pertinently, Order VIII Rule 1 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908 (“the Code”), grants discretion to a civil court to condone the delay in filing a written statement in non-commercial matters even beyond 120 days.^[iii]

Thus, the petitioners claimed that the Delhi HC had acted ultra vires its powers in prescribing a procedure that is contrary to the Code. The purported discrimination, the petitioners claimed, would result in the Rule 4, Chapter VII of the Original Side Rules as being unconstitutional.

The Delhi HC has, while deciding the instant petitions, purposefully and categorically provided the answer to the challenge raised, in two points. The provisions of the Code, as provided under section 129^[iv] therein, provide that in case of a conflict between the rules of a High Court on its original side and the provisions of the Code itself, the former shall reign supreme. In fact, the provisions of section 129 of the Code themselves empower High Courts to make rules as to their original civil procedure. The Delhi HC relied upon the non-obstante clause found in section 129 of the Code, as well as certain earlier decisions^[v] to state that the provisions of the Original Side Rules shall prevail in a case of conflict.

The Delhi HC further relied upon section 7 of the Delhi High Court Act, 1966 (“the DHC Act”)^[vi], which permits it to frame rules for the practice and procedure for the exercise of its ordinary original civil jurisdiction. Thus, the Delhi HC noted that section 7 of the DHC Act confers authority on the Delhi HC to make rules with respect to practice and procedure for the exercise of its original civil jurisdiction.

The Delhi HC declared that the mandatory period of 120 days prescribed by Rule 4, Chapter VII of the Original Side Rules, will prevail over Order VIII Rule 1 of the Code, in light of section 129 of the Code and section 7 of the DHC Act. In the opinion of the authors, the present decision provides clarity to two aspects of procedural law. Firstly, it provides clarity that the rules prescribed by a High Court in its original side shall prevail over the provisions of the Code. Thus, this decision shall be of assistance in matters before other High Courts as well, if a question as to a conflict between the Code and the High Court's rules arises. Secondly, it also provides clarity in terms of the procedural rules of the Delhi HC, whereby the mandatory period of 120 days must be followed in filing of written statements, even in non-commercial suits.

For such extension of time, the party in delay shall be burdened with costs as deemed appropriate. The written statement shall not be taken on record unless such costs have been paid/deposited. In case the defendant fails to file the affidavit of admission/ denial of documents filed by the plaintiff, the documents filed by the plaintiff shall be deemed to be admitted.
