Frequently Asked Questions

Q1 What does an Alternative Dispute Resolution practice cover in India?

ADR encompasses arbitration, mediation, and conciliation as structured methods to resolve disputes outside court litigation. It applies to commercial, contractual, construction, IP, and financial disputes, both domestic and cross-border, and includes drafting dispute resolution clauses, institutional filings, and enforcement proceedings.

Q2 When should a business consider ADR instead of filing a lawsuit?

ADR is worth considering when confidentiality matters, when preserving a commercial relationship is important, or when court timelines are impractical. It is also advisable where contracts contain mandatory arbitration or mediation clauses, as initiating litigation in such cases may be challenged on jurisdictional grounds.

Q3 Which Indian statute governs arbitration and conciliation proceedings?

The Arbitration and Conciliation Act, 1996, as amended in 2015, 2019, and 2021, is the primary statute. It covers domestic and international commercial arbitration, enforcement of foreign awards under the New York and Geneva Conventions, and conciliation. Court-annexed mediation is governed by the Mediation Act, 2023.

Q4 How long does a typical domestic arbitration take in India?

Under the 1996 Act, domestic arbitrations should conclude within 12 months from completion of pleadings, extendable by 6 months by consent. In practice, complexity, document volume, number of witnesses, and interim applications are key timeline and cost drivers. Institutional rules may impose their own schedules.

Q5 What documents are needed to initiate an arbitration proceeding?

You will typically need the underlying contract containing the arbitration clause, a notice invoking arbitration under Section 21 of the Act, a statement of claim with supporting evidence, and any prior correspondence showing the dispute. If institutional rules apply, the relevant filing forms and registration fees are also required.

Q6 What is a common mistake parties make when drafting arbitration clauses?

Vague or contradictory clauses, often called pathological clauses, are a frequent pitfall. Failing to specify the seat, governing law, number of arbitrators, or appointing authority can lead to costly jurisdictional challenges before the tribunal even addresses the merits. Careful clause drafting at the contracting stage avoids this.
