Frequently Asked Questions

Q1 What do PE and VC transaction lawyers actually help with in India?

They advise on structuring investments, negotiating term sheets, drafting SPAs, SSAs, and SHAs, conducting legal due diligence, securing FEMA and SEBI clearances, and planning exits. The goal is to protect investor and founder interests across the full deal lifecycle.

Q2 When should a startup or investor engage a PE/VC lawyer?

Ideally before signing a term sheet. Early involvement helps structure the round tax-efficiently, flag regulatory issues such as FDI sectoral caps or pricing norms under FEMA, and avoid poorly drafted clauses that create disputes at exit or in subsequent funding rounds.

Q3 Which Indian regulators and statutes govern PE and VC investments?

FEMA and RBI regulations govern foreign investment pricing and reporting. SEBI regulates AIFs and FPIs. The Companies Act 2013 governs share issuances, board governance, and filings with MCA. Sector-specific rules may also apply, for instance in fintech, pharma, or insurance.

Q4 How long does a typical PE or VC investment round take to close?

A straightforward priced round usually takes 6 to 12 weeks from term sheet to closing. Timelines extend if FEMA filings face RBI queries, if due diligence reveals red flags, or if multi-party negotiations around liquidation preference and anti-dilution terms are complex.

Q5 What documents and information should a company prepare before a funding round?

Key items include updated MCA filings, cap table, prior investment agreements, ESOP plan details, IP assignment records, material contracts, litigation disclosures, tax returns, and FEMA compliance certificates such as FC-GPR filings for any prior foreign investment.

Q6 What is the most common legal mistake founders make during fundraising?

Agreeing to governance and exit terms without understanding their long-term impact. Broad investor vetoes, full-ratchet anti-dilution, or uncapped liquidation preferences can severely limit founder control and reduce common shareholder returns in a future exit or down round.
