Frequently Asked Questions

Q1 What legal services are involved in the purchase or sale of property in India?

Property transaction services cover title verification, due diligence across Sub-Registrar and revenue records, drafting of sale agreements and deeds, RERA compliance checks, structuring of development or joint venture agreements, and handling registration and stamp duty formalities.

Q2 When should a buyer or seller engage a property transaction lawyer?

Ideally before signing any memorandum of understanding or term sheet. Early engagement allows proper title searches, detection of encumbrances or litigation risks, and structuring the deal to optimise stamp duty and tax exposure before commercial terms are locked in.

Q3 Which Indian laws and regulators govern property purchase and sale transactions?

Key statutes include the Transfer of Property Act, Registration Act, Indian Stamp Act, and RERA for projects covered under it. State revenue departments, Sub-Registrar offices, municipal corporations, and CERSAI for encumbrance checks all play regulatory roles in the process.

Q4*What is the typical timeline and what drives costs in a property transaction?

A straightforward residential sale may close in four to eight weeks. Timelines stretch when title chains are long, co-owners are involved, or municipal approvals are pending. Key cost drivers include stamp duty (which varies by state), registration fees, and the depth of due diligence required.

Q5*What documents are needed to begin due diligence on a property in India?

At minimum, the chain of title documents for the limitation period, approved building plans, completion or occupancy certificates, property tax receipts, encumbrance certificates, and any existing agreements or powers of attorney. For RERA projects, the registration number is also essential.

Q6*What common mistakes do buyers make in Indian property transactions?

Relying solely on the seller's representations without independent title searches is the most frequent error. Others include skipping CERSAI checks for existing charges, ignoring revenue record discrepancies, and failing to verify that development permissions match the actual constructed area.
