Frequently Asked Questions

Q1

What does a white collar crime defence practice cover in India?

It covers legal representation in matters involving financial fraud, securities violations, corruption, embezzlement, money laundering, tax evasion, and regulatory offenses. The practice spans criminal defence, regulatory responses, and managing parallel civil proceedings that often accompany such cases.

Q2 When should a company or individual engage a white collar crime lawyer?

Ideally at the first sign of regulatory scrutiny, such as a search, survey, summons, or informal inquiry from agencies like the ED, CBI, SFIO, or SEBI. Early engagement allows counsel to preserve documents, advise on communications, and shape the defence before positions harden.

Q3 Which Indian statutes and agencies govern white collar criminal matters?

Key statutes include the Prevention of Corruption Act, Prevention of Money Laundering Act, Companies Act 2013, SEBI Act, IT Act, and Indian Penal Code provisions on cheating and fraud. Enforcement agencies include the CBI, ED, SFIO, SEBI, and the Economic Offences Wing of state police.

Q4 How long do white collar crime investigations and trials typically take in India?

Investigations can last six months to several years depending on complexity and the agencies involved. Trials in economic offence cases often extend five to ten years. Bail applications, quashing petitions, and interim protections become critical cost drivers during prolonged proceedings.

Q5 What documents should a client prepare before engaging defence counsel?

Clients should gather all summons, notices, and FIR copies received, along with relevant financial records, board resolutions, internal audit reports, email communications, and compliance filings. Preserving electronic records in their original form is critical, as spoliation can attract adverse inferences.

Q6 What is the most common mistake individuals make in white collar investigations?

Providing unguarded statements to investigating officers without legal counsel present. Statements recorded under Section 50 of PMLA or Section 161 CrPC can be used against the maker. Another frequent error is destroying or altering documents, which creates independent criminal liability.
